I received your response to my most recent correspondence, via email, on September 6, 2023.

I had requested a response to the updated submission that I made to the Office of the Integrity Commissioner of Canada on August 22, 2023. I didn't ask for a response to previous, outdated submissions. Referring to older submissions is an attempt to minimize and to further discredit the updated information. From my perspective, the most recent response from you was nothing less than a futile attempt to ridicule me by referring to previous submissions that have most certainly been updated. By doing this, you've sought to convolute the serious matters that I'm attempting to convey to so-called government officials.

You've subsequently attempted to make it appear as though my complaint doesn't fall within the mandate of the Office of the Integrity Commissioner when we both know that it does. You've been deceptive and you're acting in the absence of any actual integrity from my perspective. I've been dealing with corruption in Canada for well over two decades now and it becomes glaringly obvious to me when the government is trying to thwart my advocacy efforts. You've insulted my intelligence and you've attempted to thwart my valid efforts to expose serious corruption in Canada. It's obvious and plain to see!

It's become apparent to me that attempts to get accountability from this office are fruitless. With that said, I'll move along now, leaving the so-called Integrity Commissioner and staff to steep in all of the corruption that I perceive to be floating through that office. From here on I can only recommend that government staff govern themselves accordingly as the actual truth about the nature of Canada's government continues to be absorbed by the population at large.

At this point, it simply is what it is. In due time, all government officials, believe it or not, will be required to account for their past actions not only as a so-called professional but in a subsequent personal capacity as well! As for myself, I'll continue with my efforts to expose this very serious issue to the people of Canada, trusting that the people of Canada will respond accordingly once properly informed about the actual nature and function of the respective Crown and Commonwealth.

I usually end my correspondence with some sort of gratuitous, kind statement but in this case there's nothing, at all, for me to be grateful for. Nor can I think of one single kind thing to say in closing. So, like I said, I'll simply move along now.

P.S. It's my sincere opinion that you should be reported to the Law Society for unethical paralegal behaviour. I have a lot going on right now but should I find the time I'll be making that report to the Law Society myself. I understand that you'll likely be protected by the Law Society but the process will be revealing, nonetheless, and the paper trail will, at the end of the line, add to the evidence of an undeniably corrupt government in Canada. That's really all I'm after at present. I get that there's currently no accountability for people who purport this rotten system but once the truth that you're gatekeeping is finally out that will all change very quickly. You can bank on that!
